

sister act

Like many girls, Phoebe and Annette Stephens were inspired by their grandmother's style growing up. But their grandmother—Annette Nancarrow—was an artist and designer who created jewelry for everyone from Frieda Kahlo to Elizabeth Arden, and these Mexico City-raised sisters didn't just raid her expansive jewelry collection, they took to the drawing board and created a line of their own. Anndra Neen takes its cues from their relative's eclectic nature, while looking to antique European jewels, Ancient Egyptian motifs, and Japanese and French medieval design elements. This translates to handcrafted items like statement metal collars and abstract geometric miniatures embellished with semi precious stones, copper, brass, and rope, which tread the line between rustic and romantic. Think of them as heirlooms for a new generation. LD aandraneen.com
